

Why I must fight our morally corrupt family court system

By Peter Kornakoff

Even though my relationship with my ex-spouse has ended for good and I am trying to move on with life for the immediate benefit of my kids and myself, there is still a problem that I, as a concerned father and citizen of this country, feel compelled to deal with. The problem to which I am referring to is the problem of the many terrible injustices and human rights violations being committed against children and families in family courts across Canada almost every day.

With my own family court matter almost behind me, I know that I have the option of just continuing on with my life and turning my back on the problem and to just leave it up to others who get caught in the family court system after me to worry about it. I know that I can still love and be loved by other people, regardless of the legal and social environment and continue on in life and turn a blind eye to what is happening to others in these family courts. Certainly, my personal experience with marriage in Canada has taught me that if I was to have children again I would definitely take legal precautions or decide not to have them because of the risk of being a man in this country.

I know that if I, along with others, chose to do nothing, that this anti-family, anti-father environment which destroys the ability to love and have relationships (radical feminist dogma of female superiority) will not only continue to go unchallenged, but will be passed on to not only my own children, but to all our nation's children.

We all have a duty to our children, their descendants and our country, if at least not to each other, to fix this problem which is literally ripping apart the very fabric of our nation and threatening to destroy the very foundation of our society. We all have a civic responsibility to make our society and our world a better place to live, if we are to enjoy a good life and to be able to pass on to our children a better way of life. We all have a responsibility to the future.

We, as parents, because of our love to our children and grandchildren, for Canada and for all humanity, cannot allow this current cultural environment where one gender in society and the lawyers and all those in the divorce industry who benefit from adversity in family relationships to be passed on to other generations.

For this reason, I have decided that I must continue on with my struggle to fight the system and to do what I can to make my country and my community a better place than it is now, for the benefit of my children and my nation. In fact, I believe it is time for all good citizens of honour, in Canada, both men and women, to stand up, to be counted, and for the sake of the children, to fight this family court death machine!
