

Tho whom it may concern

My family is suffering from intense emotional abuse, and my mother is to blame. She is abusive, violent and mentally unstable. She has used police corruption to get away with the crimes she's committed. When I was 9 years old, my mother and a cop friend of hers took me and brother's away from our home at 1:00 am against our will without telling us where we were going and holding us there when we wanted to go home. I consider that kidnapping. When I was 13, my mother had two police officers come to our home and arrest my father under false charges of abuse. Even though my father had evidence to prove his innocence (a tape recording of my mother's psychotic moodswings and abusive behavior), the cops still arrested my father, and gave the tape to my mother to destroy. I was a witness to an act of police corruption. Now that I have seen her for who she is, and because I reported her to the Children's Aid Society, she has turned her abuse towards me. Constant threats and intimidations, attempting to force me to talk about something that she knows makes me uncomfortable, and when anyone politely asks her to leave them alone, she continues to talk, intentionally trying to agravate. She is a danger to me, my family, and herself. All my life I have been a victim of her abuse. She is mentally ill and is in a desperate need of some psychiatric help. My family is in pain, and the only way to bring peace to our lives is if my mother leaves the house. My father is a model parent, and has always been there when our mother wasn't, and i fully chose to live with him. I would also like to testify against my mother in court.

Thank You for taking the time to read my letter.

Sincerely Yours
